About this course

Politically motivated for a career in International Relations?

Does a career within foreign affairs, policy analysis or in an international development organisation catalyze your career motivation?

This course give you an insight into the complex (mine) field of relations between nations and the workings of a variety of political institutions around the world. Governance, public policy, national security and border control ... you'll gain an intriguing perspective on these and on foreign policy and the implications of globalization.

Your specialist competencies can also extend to your economics degree, where you'll gain a firm grasp of economic theory, examine how different economic agents interact in the market, and be able to confidently analyse data and provide advice to key stakeholders. Now that's a conciliatory career!

Combine a Bachelor of Politics and International Relations / Bachelor of Applied Economics and you will:

- gain an in-depth understanding of politics, international relations and their disciplinary perspectives
- develop an understanding of political institutions and how they operate at the national and international levels
- gain competence in a range of research methods, analytical techniques, critical thinking and professional ethics
- gain a strong core of knowledge in economic theory, learn to apply it in real life situations, understand how different economic agents interact in the market and how government intervention affects their behaviour
- be able to interpret economic information, confidently analyse data, write reports and provide advice to various stakeholders.

Work-integrated learning

Work-integrated learning (WIL) is learning first-hand through real work or work-like experiences. WIL is a key element to enhancing employability in the workplace and is integral to many of our courses. This reinforces our commitment to preparing professional and highly employable graduates with the right mix of skills and knowledge.

Career opportunities
