Study Help Drop-in

About This Service

- This service is designed to help students improve their study skills. This includes planning assignments, academic integrity, writing, researching and referencing, time management and exam preparation and more.
- This service is based on a drop-in model to allow you to seek study support from a team of specialist Learning Advisors when you need it, so no appointments are necessary.
- While Learning Advisors can provide help with exam preparation strategies, take-home exams must be completed independently by the student.
- We can assist students with work from UC and UCC units and courses.
- By the end of your consultation with a Learning Advisor, you will be provided with steps to work on independently. Once you have spent a reasonable amount of time working towards these steps, you are welcome to seek further feedback or clarification from a Learning Advisor and to be guided on the next steps in the assignment writing process. We take this step by step approach to foster independent learning through skills development.
- In line with the principles of academic integrity, students will be guided to proofread and edit their own work.
- For content help, students are advised to see their tutor, lecturer or unit convener.

Study Skills support can help improve your academic skills but does not guarantee a pass mark in the assessment for which you receive help.

Study Skills aims to ensure that all UC students can cultivate the skills and confidence that will lead to study success in an inclusive, friendly, student-driven environment. We build UC students' skills and facilitate independent learning across a range of programs and connect students to a variety of UC support services where appropriate.
