

About the Project:

For this project, I wanted to showcase the concept of hexagonal homes and how its form could be used in a modular stylish fashion. I was inspired by the form of the hexagons seen in honeycombs as well as many architectural buildings that have also used this form for many different applications. I am also currently experimenting with different types of collages and ways to express my architectural ideas and so this watercolor style was one of them. I created this work in photoshop and rhino by first creating the main form and then adding the different colors and textures onto the surfaces. The use of lightish more neutral colours helped to make the image more visually calming and I added a layer of crumpled paper at low opacity over the entire image in order to tie everything together and give it that more imperfect natural look.
