

I am very passionate about the importance of continuing to have fun as I grow older. While play is crucial for children's development, it is also important for people of all ages, especially when life is busy. I believe play will prevent life from becoming mundane and boring, adding joy, laughter and creativity as well as relieve stress. I find it incredibly beautiful the way children are able to find excitement and joy in the simple "everyday." I was inspired to convey this in photography, a medium I am not very experienced with but was curious to explore. The Lino prints were created in two different contrasting colours to highlight my belief that our lives are determined by the lens we look through and how we see the world.

"We don't stop playing because we grow old, we grow old because we stop playing"

- George Bernard Shaw
